You can also view an english text description, this will give you a better idea whether what you are interested in is real or made up. Use text description.. Temperature (humidity). Temperatures above 50°F (14°C) are considered to be optimum when the tree is growing in a temperate climate, but the tree can grow more in cold climates that have low humidity levels. High-temperature conditions affect the growth of trees in a specific way. Cold weather is generally dry with a higher percentage of moisture. Humidity levels can drop below normal during cold weather, and warm weather can provide higher levels with a decreased level of moisture.
